Applying Early to Law School: 3 Advantages

Even though most law schools set their final application deadlines in February or March, there are three distinct advantages to getting your applications in during the fall:

- 1. Schools evaluate your application more carefully earlier in the process. Schools can afford to give a more thorough analysis of your application as a whole, meaning an on-the-fence applicant (and everyone's somewhere on the fence) could earn admissions on the strength of his or her personal statement and recommendations.
- 2. The later you apply, the tougher the competition. As the final deadlines approach, it becomes strictly a numbers game—you and your competition are battling for fewer and fewer spaces. And may the best LSAT score win.
- 3. Your application may look fresher. Get your application in before an admissions officer has seen hundreds upon hundreds.

Get started early and get a head start on the competition.
